Chief Bob White Flagstaff PD Retired; Emotional Survival for Law Enforcement is designed to have law enforcement professionals review how the same psychological and physiological states that produce success in the law enforcement operative's professional life, can without awareness and management strategies produce damage in the realm of the personal life. The course looks at the short-term impact on judgment, decision making and reaction time and points out the long-term connection to depression and to presumptive disease development in the areas of Type 2 diabetes, obesity, heart disease and stroke.
